IN THIS ISSUE / FOOD & CITY

This week begins with the absence of talks and moves into two New York theaters: Tala Madani presents a selection of her animations at MoMA, while BAM screens the Persian-language drama Sunshine Express. The cover photograph is from Sofreh, whose listing now carries newly checked official reservation terms.

IRAN & THE WORLD

Tehran says no talks are underway

Reuters reported November 10 that Mohsen Rezaei said no negotiations were underway between Tehran and Washington, while Iran still awaited a US response to its conditions.

At Sofreh, Nasim Alikhani's restaurant on Saint Marks Avenue, Persian hospitality meets Brooklyn city life. Its official reservation page releases tables for up to six people online four weeks ahead at midnight. It lists a $25 per person charge for no-shows, cancellations or party-size reductions after 11:30 a.m. on the reservation day. Dinner is listed Tuesday through Sunday, 5:30 to 9:30 p.m.; review the current terms before booking.

On Bogart Street, Eyval belongs to a newer chapter of Persian dining in Brooklyn. Chef Ali Saboor, previously of Sofreh, approaches Iranian culinary traditions through a contemporary restaurant setting. The official Eat and Drink pages are the best starting point for its current offering. This is a researched introduction, rather than a review based on an anonymous meal.

Four addresses in Manhattan

From Madison Avenue to Chelsea and the Upper East Side

Midtown

Ravagh · Madison Avenue

Ravagh’s Madison Avenue restaurant is one of four addresses currently listed by the business across Manhattan and Long Island. The restaurant describes its cooking in terms of balance and aroma. For readers looking for a Persian meal in Midtown, this is a practical address to know. Use the restaurant’s own site for menus, ordering and opening hours.

FROM THE EDITOR

The city we make together

A week can be shaped by news of what is not happening: talks that have yet to begin. In the same city, screens light up and artists approach the present through image, humor and story. These pages keep the distinctions clear: a political position is not an outcome, an event preview is not reporting from the room, and a business condition belongs with its official source.

OUR METHOD & SOURCES

Text is prepared using the linked sources. Introductions are not reviews based on personal visits. Photos come from the credited sources and remain their owners’ property. This week’s sources were checked November 16, 2026; individual listing dates appear on our website. Please confirm hours, reservations and event terms before visiting.
